Programme

(Paris time)

As cities continue to grow, now encompassing more than 50% of the world's urban population, the challenges of urban transportation systems become increasingly complex (Agarwal, O. P, 2019). In this context, this round table aims to bring together urban planners, mobility experts, and professionals to explore the limits to urban mobility. The goal is to examine both the constraints in analyzing mobility and the practical, technical, and political barriers encountered by researchers and specialists in their respective fields. With multi-sited case studies from Europe and Asia, this event will shed light on diverse strategies and innovations aimed at decongestion, security, inclusion, and health that have been implemented across these regions to enhance urban mobility. By discussing different cultural and infrastructural contexts, this round table will inform on contemporary mobility practices.
