Paris School of Economics, Campus Jourdan , Room 8
48, boulevard Jourdan 75014 Paris

as a part of our regular seminar
"Industrial Dynamics in Japan and Korea : firms' strategies and public policies"

□ SUMMARY

Although Japan is experiencing deindustrialization in term of labor and GDP, as other developed countries, Japan's manufacturing sector still has strong competitiveness and showed good performance, especially in the early 2000. In this lecture, some idea on how the industrial policy of Japan affected (oe not affected) the current situation of the manufacturing sector of Japan will be shown, with looking back the history of industrial policy of Japan. Critical issues for Japanese economy and industrial policy are also referred.
